The new blended course for teacher leadership training: innovation in post-pandemic education

The S4S project, now in its third phase, has introduced a blended course (a mix of online training with interactive webinars replacing traditional face-to-face sessions and distance learning) aimed at high school teachers, with the goal of redefining post-pandemic education from a leadership perspective.

The main objective was to equip educators with the skills necessary to lead the transition from remote to in-person learning, in line with the evolving educational needs. Structured in modules, each with specific learning objectives, the course offered a comprehensive framework that included theoretical foundations, practical exercises, reflective practices, and continuous leadership development opportunities.

The experience of teachers in the blended course

The 20 teachers drew from their classroom experiences to solve a complex scenario assigned to them. Depending on the various real-life cases they had faced in their careers, each had to solve the situation according to their own insights.

A brief preview of WP5

S4S is working on work package number 5, which involves the creation of an electronic manual of best practices to be adopted, resulting from the experiments carried out by all the project partners. WP5 represents an Online Collection of Best Practices (an 80-page electronic manual, accessible from mobile devices with a secure and universally readable font), a result of the activities carried out during the training period. This project outcome is led by Folkuniversitetet, thanks to its high expertise in this field.
